Editorial Board — Workflow Policy Update

1. Editorial Override

For articles classified as News, Seasonal Articles, Life-Saving Tips During a Natural Disaster, or Follow-Up Articles, content writers are permitted to temporarily bypass the standard editorial process and proceed directly to the publishing stage.

All coordination between each stage or process must be handled by assigned members.

1.1 Eligibility

- The Content Head determines whether a piece of content qualifies for the override during the content proposal stage, subject to CEO approval.
- Only after the Content Head or the Founder grants explicit permission may the content advance to the publishing stage. The CEO holds final authority over all decisions.
- A "Follow-Up Article" is defined as an article published within 12 days of a prior related article. It must be either fact-checking or informative in nature.
- Content must fall strictly within one or more of the eligible categories listed above.
- Information within the content must be directly relevant to current circumstances at the time of publication.
- The Editorial Override may be invoked a maximum of 5 times per month across all content.

1.2 Content Head Obligations Under Override

- The Content Head must personally review the article and verify that it meets organizational standards.
- If the content is inadequate, the Content Head will edit and improve the article using sources submitted by the writer or other reliable sources. This must be completed within the same 48-hour window allocated to the publishing process.
- If the Content Head does not respond to an override request within the time period decided by the organization, this will be documented and submitted to HR by workflow coordinators. The CEO will assume responsibility for the task.

1.3 Operations Board Reassignment

- In the event of an override, all current tasks assigned to the relevant Operations Board member(s) will be delayed.
- Reassignment itself serves as notice, and reassigned tasks must be completed within 48 hours.

1.4 Written Justification

- The Content Head must provide written justification at the time of granting an override, documenting the reason for eligibility. This record will be referenced during the monthly performance review.

1.5 Post-Publication Review

- A post-publication review is mandatory for all articles published under the Editorial Override.
- The review must assess whether the override was warranted and whether the published content met organizational standards.
- The timeframe and responsible party for the post-publication review should be defined by the Content Head or the Editorial Board.

2. Content Head Overview

Due to ongoing performance concerns, the Content Head has been assigned an expanded role within the editorial workflow. The following procedures apply.

All coordination between each stage or process must be handled by assigned members.

2.1 Content Proposal Stage

- Before any writing begins, the writer must propose the content idea to the Content Team Head or the CEO in the designated platform/channel
- The writing process commences only after the Content Head or the CEO approves the proposal.

2.2 Post-Draft Review

- After the drafting stage and before fact-checking begins, the workflow coordinator—or the writer themselves if no coordinator is assigned—must report the draft's status to the Content Head.
- The Content Head will then review the raw article, conducting a review that must cover at minimum: structural completeness, factual source verification, and tonal consistency with organizational standards. The specific criteria within these categories are to be determined by the Content Head.
- No article may proceed to the following stages before this review is completed.
- All assessments performed at this stage will be recorded and evaluated during the monthly performance review.

2.3 Review Timeframe and Non-Response Scenarios

- If the Content Head does not complete the review within 12 hours of receiving the draft, the review stage will be skipped and the article will proceed to the next stage.
- Failure to respond within 12 hours will be recorded and evaluated in the monthly performance review.
- If the Content Head cannot complete the review within 24 hours for reasons including but not limited to illness, injury, or personal circumstances, this must be communicated in advance and will also be recorded for the performance review.
- The 12-hour and 24-hour windows begin from the moment the draft status is reported to the Content Head.

2.4 CEO Involvement

- The CEO may review an article in place of the Content Head depending on availability. This is not a required step and does not gate the editorial process.
- The Content Head is the primary decision-maker for advancing articles through this stage. The CEO's review, when it occurs, is supplementary but can override the Content Head's decision.
